Iris Ceramica is top quality world's leading industrial groups, producing high-tech ceramics and porcelain for wall and floor coverings.

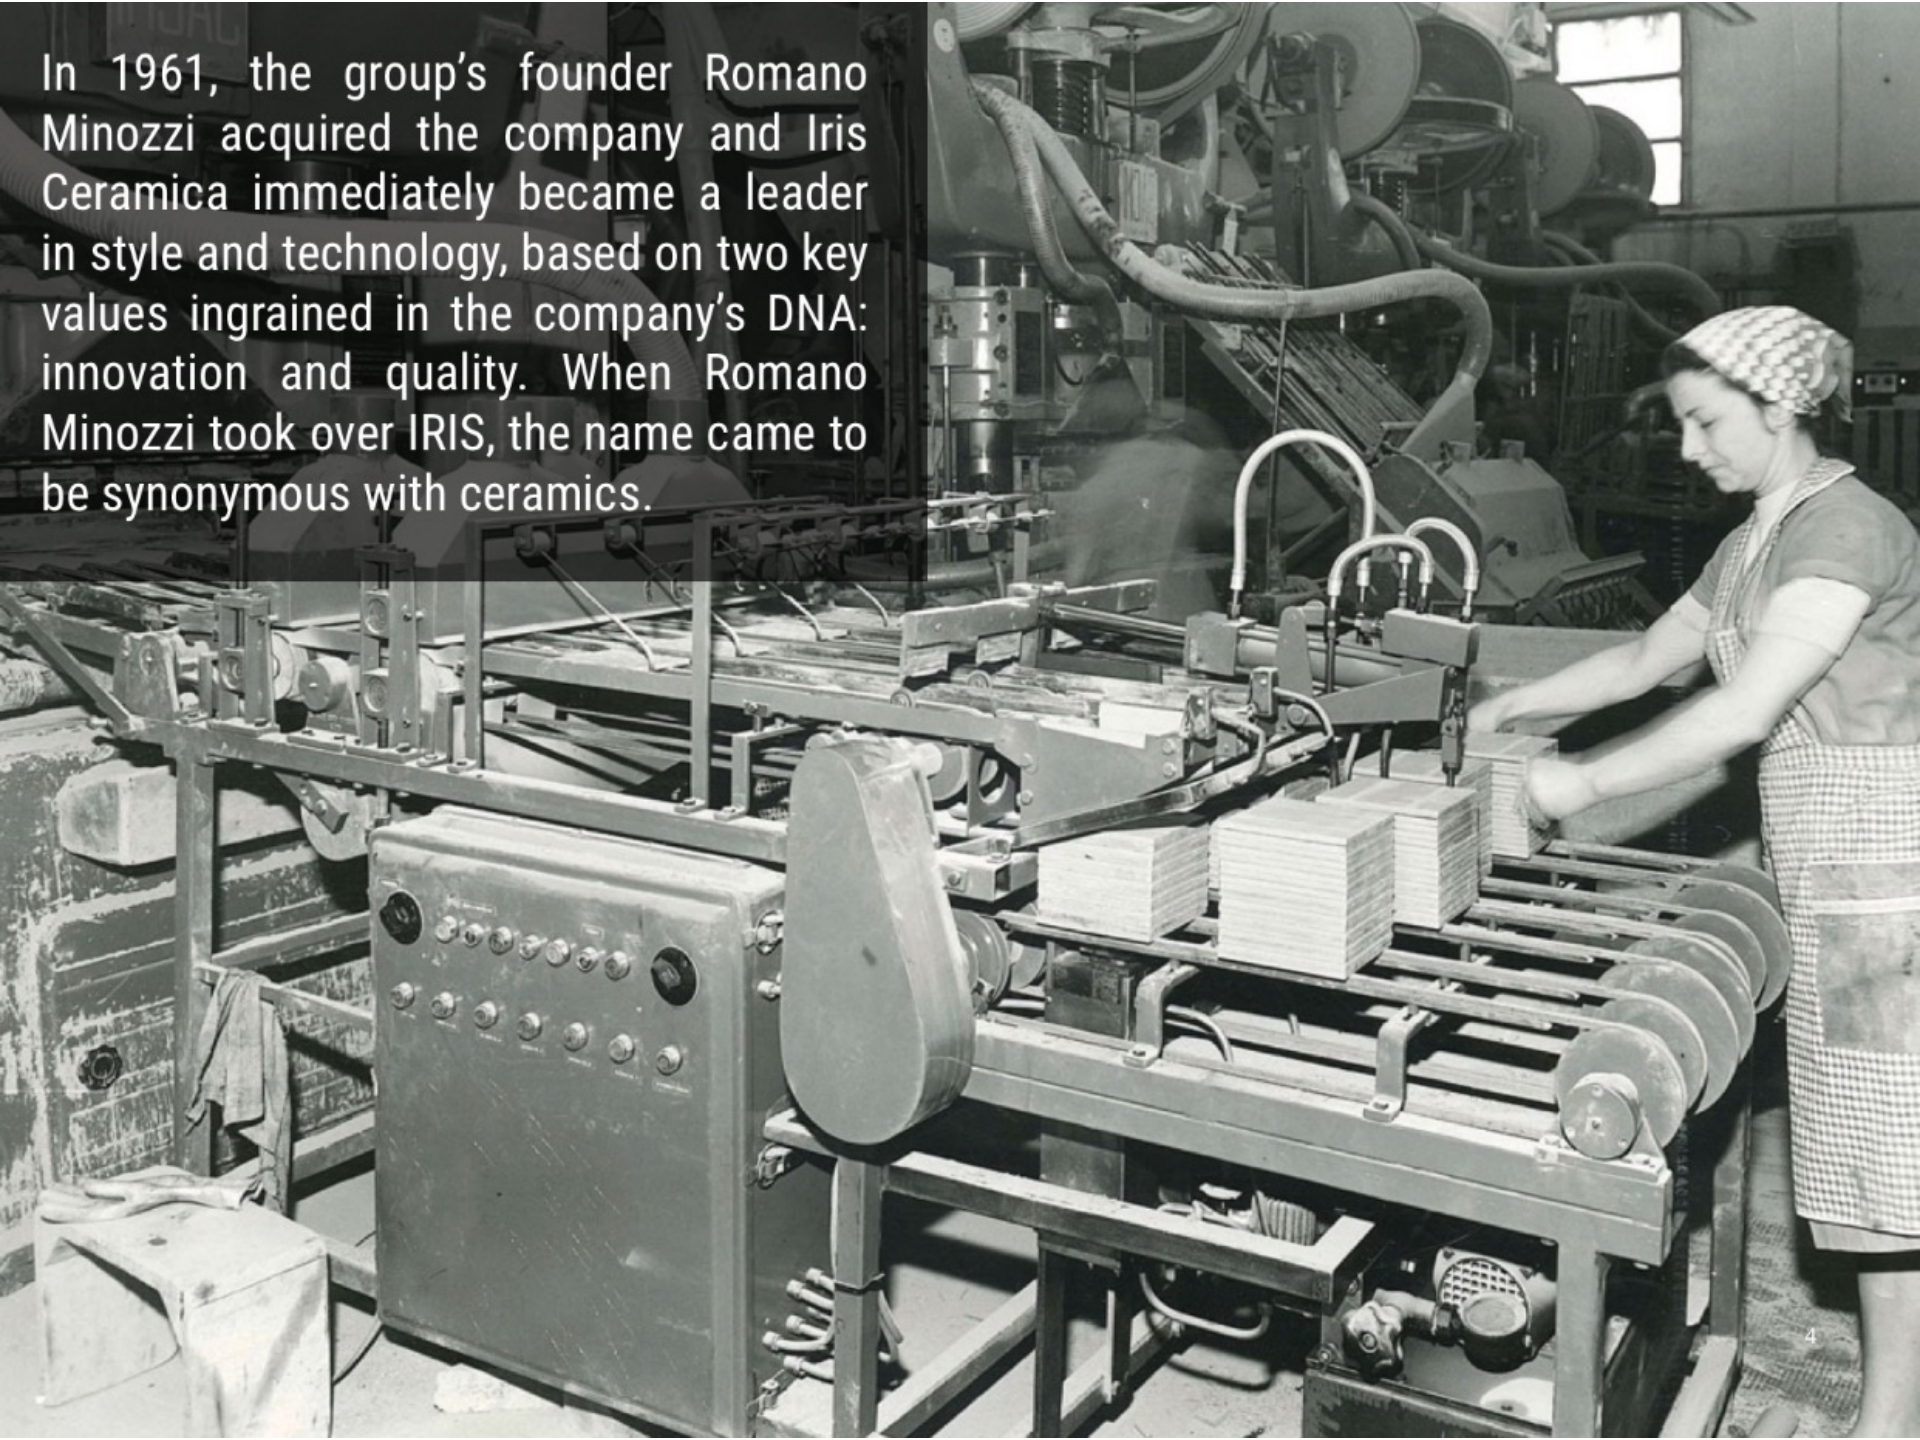

Romano Minozzi и его дочь Federica Minozzi

Iris Ceramica, Graniti Fiandre GROUP

In 1961, the group's founder Romano Minozzi acquired the company and Iris Ceramica immediately became a leader in style and technology, based on two key values ingrained in the company's DNA: innovation and quality. When Romano Minozzi took over IRIS, the name came to be synonymous with ceramics.

A photograph of a modern industrial-style interior, likely a workshop or studio. The background features a large wall made of a grid of rectangular glass panels, some of which are frosted or textured. Below this wall is a long wooden countertop. On the countertop, there are various tools, containers, and small objects. A black metal chair with a curved back is positioned in front of the countertop. To the right, there is a tall metal shelving unit with several shelves, holding various ceramic or glassware items. Two pendant lights with a cage-like design hang from the ceiling. The floor is made of large, light-colored tiles. The overall aesthetic is industrial and minimalist.

A modern desk lamp with a silver-colored metal arm and a cylindrical, cream-colored lampshade with a thin brown band. The lamp is positioned against a wall of large, light-grey rectangular tiles. A small, rectangular, light-grey sign with the word "MONDAY" in bold black letters is attached to the wall. In the bottom right corner, a dark blue storage bin is partially visible, containing a stack of papers or magazines.
